Visiting white rhinos in Zimbabwe

Zimbabwe's Hwange National Park is home to a rich array of big game, including lions, leopards and elephants – and now white rhinos too, says Sue Watt in The Daily Telegraph. Wiped out in the park by poachers 20 years ago, the animals are being reintroduced to a fenced sanctuary carved out of communal land along its southern border, under a “pioneering” scheme created by Mark Butcher of Imvelo Safari Lodges in collaboration with local villagers. This year has seen the first two arrivals, translocated from Malilangwe, 500 miles away, and now guarded by trained local scouts. For guests at Imvelo's nearby lodges, the trip to see them can easily be combined with game drives in the park and a visit to the Victoria Falls. The Luxury Safari Company (theluxurysafaricompany.com) has a week-long trip for £5,221pp, including flights.
